In 1972, Skripal completed the military school in Kaliningrad, where he became a qualified sapper parachutist. He then studied at the Military Engineering Academy in Moscow and then served in the Soviet Airborne troops.

In 1996, because of his poor health (diabetes), Skripal was sent back to Moscow, where he went to work at the head office of GROe and for a long time was acting director of GROe's personnel department. Skripal held the rank of colonel when he retired in 1999, due to his reduced state of health. He continued to travel to Spain, where he had a house near Málaga at his disposal, and was cared for. According to Russian prosecutors, he began working for the United Kingdom secret service in 1995 (MI6) and passed on state secrets, such as the identity of Russian intelligence agents. After his retirement he worked in the internal affairs department of the Russian Ministry of Foreign Affairs, while he continued to work for MI6. [17] [18] [19] He would have inflated the coverage of 300 Russian agents. [20]
